4. The 20th International Japanese English Translation Conference (IJET-20)
Organized by the Japan Association of Translators (日本翻訳者協会)
Date: February 14-15 (Sat-Sun), 2009

Venue: North Sydney Harbourview Hotel (next to North Sydney railway station)

Website: <http://ijet.jat.org/en/ijet-20> <<http://ijet.jat.org/en/ijet-20>>

The annual International Japanese English Translation conference (IJET) was established by the Japan Association of Translators (JAT) in 1990 and has since evolved into a highly successful event that brings together language practitioners from all over the world. The next conference, IJET-20, will be held in Sydney on 14-15 February 2009 Registrations are now open, and early birds catch the discount! So head over to: <http://ijet.jat.org/en> <<http://ijet.jat.org/en>>

Applications for advertising are now also being accepted, with details on available packages to be found on the site. In addition, if you would like to join the IJET-20 Participants mailing list, click here

(<http://lists.jat.org/mailman/listinfo/ijet20>

<<http://lists.jat.org/mailman/listinfo/ijet20>>) and fill in your details.

This is a list for participants of IJET-20 who want to discuss the conference or to just e-mingle. Non-participants are also welcome to join.

5. Japanese Studies manuscript submission moves online

The journal Japanese Studies have switched to an on-line submission and review system. The system should make it easier to submit your paper and track its progress through peer review. Manuscript Central streamlines the peer review process, making it more transparent and a great deal easier for authors. The system also facilitates reviewers in gaining access to articles, enabling the submission of reviews on-line.

Electronic systems can seem impersonal, but Japanese Studies has tried to build good relationships with our editorial advisors, authors and reviewers and we intend to remain a friendly, approachable journal.
